Repeated field taking up to February, 1903, revealed only some slight improvement. My study of glaucoma having led me to believe that uncorrected errors of refraction are a very important element in the production of that disease, I was much interested in the views of Professor Schoen of Leipzig, published in the Ophthalmic Record, of October, 1902. He says: It has been shown by microscopic examination that forty eyes which had been examined in the live subject and found to have the so-called physiological excavation, had acquired it during the life time. This result was confirmed by statistical research and by the fact that new born children, with a few exceptions, do not exhibit excavation. I was able to examine microscopically fifteen eyes which I had previously examined in the living subject. Besides the beginning of the excavation, I discovered anatomical changes in the ora serrata with degeneration of the ciliary muscle. The degeneration of the ciliary muscle I consider the missing link explaining glaucoma simplex. During the past year I have noted the presence or absence of the physiological excavation in my refraction cases, and so far as possible have taken the fields in the presence of excavation, with results that are, to say the least, interesting. Out of 160 cases not otherwise so diseased as to lead manifestly to field changes, concavity of the disc has been noted in 45 cases, or about one-fourth of the whole number. For...
