Patriotism is a natural and important sentiment. Upon it depends the defence of the State, the welfare of society, and the safety and happiness of the individual. The foundation of patriotism is local attachment, - a fondness for one s kindred and neighborhood. My friends, we should be less than patriots, less than men, did we forget that spot of earth from whence our wandering feet departed. This is why, though we are true and loyal to the Great Republic, our hearts yet turn to our New England homes, faithfully as the trembling needle to the pole. This is why, as grateful children, we are met in memory of the men who gave us a home and a country, upon the day when first they stood upon the...
