Not illustrated. 1907 Excerpt: . . . the skin moist, the face and lips livid, and the temperature normal. The pulse was regular, of good tension, and 70 to the minute. The reflexes were abolished; urine examination showed a trace of albumin. The possibility of the case being one of apoplexy was constantly in mind, but a rigid examination made to elicit signs of hemiplegia was of no avail. When one considers this typical group of symptoms in conjunction with the fact that the patient was a Chinaman, and more than probably addicted to opium, the diagnosis seemed positive. In two days the coma subsided sufficiently for signs of hemiplegia to appear, and the diagnosis of apoplexy was readily made. WOOD ALCOHOL POISONING. By Surg. H. E. Odei. I, I. S. Navy. Among the cases of poisoning which we are constantly encountering in the Navy, wood alcohol holds a prominent place. It is well known that some members of the enlisted force go to any lengths to obtain intoxicating drinks, and the following cases are illustrative and instructive. With such examples before us, it behooves all medical officers to be on guard for the recognition of and to improve every opportunity to warn his shipmates against exposing themselves to such direful accidents. In the afternoon of October 26 and during the day of October 27, 1906, T. F. C, J. F. W. , and N. C. P. , United States Navy, with other members of the ships company, drank a quantity of a...
